ARCHAIC AND UNUSUAL MEDICAL TERMS

Preparation of the following list was aided by use of Our Family Physician (Henderson & Smith, 1885), a book, we are happy to report, that is long out of print. How it was possible for anyone, treated by the antidotes found therein, to survive to adulthood is one of the mysteries of life.

AFFECTION, a general term indicating a disease or ailment
ANASARCA--generalized edema or dropsy
APOPLEXY--sudden loss, more or less complete, of consciousness and voluntary motion, without the circulation or breathing being suspended. It is produced by pressure on the brain
CATARRH--inflamation of mucous membrane, especially of the nose or throat
CHILLBLAINS--painful swelling or inflamed sore on the feet or hands, caused by exposure to cold
CHOLERA MORBUS--a disease characterized by vomiting, purging, violent gripings, coldness and cramps of the extremities. This was probably appendicitis
COLA--apparently an inflamation of the colon
CONSUMPTION--tuberculosis
CYANOSIS--bluish coloration of the skin due to lack of oxygen
DENTITION--teething
DROPSY--an accumulation of serum or watery fluid in cavities or tissues of the body
DYSPEPSIA--indigestion or heartburn
ERYSIPELAS--an acute infectious disease of the skin or mucous membranes, also known as St. Anthony's fire
GRAVEL--kidney stone or stone in the bladder
FLUX (or bloody flux)--dysentery
HYDROCELE--a collection of watery fluid in a cavity of the body, especially in the scrotum or along the spermatic cord
INANITION--exhaustion from lack of food or inability to absorb and digest food
INFORMATION OF _____--an inflamation
JANDERS--jaundice
LOCKJAW--tetanus
MARASMUS--atrophy; progressive emaciation
NEURALGIA--pain in a nerve. In late 19th century the term was used quite frequently, and apparently in many cases for distress that had little to do with the nervous system. For example, there was "neuralgia of the heart" which, judging from the symptoms, was either heart attack or angina. "Neuralgia of the stomach" seems to have been what we call heartburn. "Neuralgia of the head" was simply a headache
PARTURITION--labor and childbirth
PHTHISIS (phthisis pulmonalis)--a wasting away of the body, particularly from tuberculosis
PILES--hemorrhoids
PROLAPSIS--the falling or slipping out of place of an organ
PUTRID SORE THROAT--general infection of mouth and throat area
REMITTING (or intermittent) FEVER--symptoms suggesting malaria
RISING--a morbid swelling
ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE--see "erysipelas"
SCARLETINA--scarlet fever
SCROFULA--enlargement of one or more glands, particularly of the neck; goiter was considered scrofula
SPINA BITHIDA (bifida)--birth defect involving spinal column
TABES MESENTERICA--a type of tuberculosis
TERTIARY--a stage in the development of syphilis
THRUSH--ulcerative sore throat
TRICHINIA--apparently trichinosis
TRISMUS NASCENTIUM--tetanus
VARICOCELE--a varicose vein in the scrotum

The following has been suggested as an improved method of distinguishing the descendants of Grand Uncles, Grand Aunts, etc., because it prevents the confusing repetition of same terms for various degrees of cousinship:

Designate the children of your Grand Uncles or Grand Aunts as your Grand Cousins.
Designate the children of your Grand Cousins as your Grand 2nd Cousins.
Designate the children of your Grand 2nd Cousins as your Grand 3rd Cousins. Etc., etc.

In Temple work, you must always state your relationship to each one of the dead individuals, not their relationship to you; for instance, you must designate yourself as nephew (or niece) to your uncle or aunt, grand nephew (or grand niece) to your grand uncle or grand aunt, etc.

A clear distinction should be made between blood kindred and those to whom they are married; the latter are known as relatives in law; thus, a man is nephew-in-law to his uncle's wife, cousin-in-law to his cousin's wife, etc. If the dead are known to be blood relations, but the degree of relationship cannot be stated, the word Relative is to be given. When there is no family connection the word Friend should be used.

Christmas present Thursday in the shape of a telegram from their preserves on the Sandusky bay, says the Cleveland Press. It announced that a supposedly "dry hole" had been found full of oil.

This oil well was shot some weeks ago, but showed no indications of oil at that time and was abandoned. Christmas day one of the oil drillers accidentally discovered that the well had filled with oil.

The club is now drilling the third well. The first well showed oil. The third well will be sent deeper than the other two and the club members who entered the speculation are now buying diamond sunbursts for their wives' Christmas presents. 12/27/1901 FDN

A JOKE ON SAM.

The Gibsonburg Derrick this week prints this item:

Christmas has a queer effect on some people. Attorney S. C. Garver came out this morning on the eight o'clock train to try a lawsuit which he had set for Friday. Sam was considerably bored when he found out that it was Thursday. He took the next car back, after the boys roasted him good and plenty. They must have very bad water at Fremont.

The above reminds the NEWS of a story told about a prominent Norwalk attorney some years ago. The attorney owned a farm near the city and each morning walked out to milk his cow. One morning he got to thinking about a case he had in court and after he had finished milking he absent-mindedly walked to the court room with pail of milk in one hand, feed bucket in the other and wearing his overalls. He woke up when he reached the judge's stand and was given the laugh by his fellow attorneys.

appreciated by the assembly. The children also delivered their money barrels containing an offering for the orphans' home at Richmond, Ind. A collection was taken up for the same purpose. Miss Edith Schreckel sang a solo which was excellently rendered and highly appreciated by all present. There were two Christmas trees which were nicely decorated. Each of the children received a present consisting of a book and candy. The services were closed by repeating the Lord's prayer conjointly, and the announcement of the benediction by the pastor.

Charleston, whose midwinter exposition has been opened, has a population of 55,000. It is one of the oldest cities in the United States, the first settlement having been made 200 years ago by the English colonists. One hundred years ago Charleston's population was 18,000, exceeded only by Philadelphia, New York, Baltimore and Boston. Clyde Item 1/2/1902

Mr. [illegible] Wayne Miller quotes John as having said, while in conversation with some of his friends, "Gentlemen, I can make as good a pail as was ever in the heavens". It seems he performed many services for the people of his settlement, in many different ways. It is written that John Miller Sr. made the coffin in which William Ballard was buried, he therefore excelled in carpentry also.

The settlers and his own family relied on John Miller extensively for the [illegible] needed for the well being of their families, having accomplished this many, many times, the word hunter and woodsman may also be added to his many achievements.

Land owned by John Sr. consisted of several hundred acres, about a mile above Hunters Spring on Indian Creek. At what date he built his home on this land is not known, perhaps it was while many of the settlers were forting at a place called Cook's Fort. This Fort constructed by Jacob and Valentine Cook, sons of John Hamilton Cook, of London, England, about the year 1770 just below Greenville, Monroe County, Virginia (now West Virginia) on the south bank of Indian Creek, was built for the protection of the settlers against Indian attackes.

The home of John Sr. and Barbara (Mauzy) Miller was a large two story, double log structure. Near his home, he also constructed a fort for the purpose of protecting his family in the event of Indian attack. In the year 1910, some of the logs from this fort were still in use in a granary at James Pences. The town of Springfield came into being after the days of John Miller, which later became known as Hunters Springs. On this farm and near the dwelling that was once owned by John and Barbara Miller now stands the handsome brick home of James Pence, the dwelling and fort of John Miller have long ago been torn down and not one visible trace or sign of this past history remain to mark the place where they once stood.

John Sr. and his wife, Barbary, are at rest in the old graveyard located by the side of a public road that passed through this farm once owned by John and later owned by the heirs of the William Pence family, and situated on the original land grant he himself had taken out in the year 1785. (This land grant has long since passed into hands of strangers.) Their graves are unmarked and long ago neglected. If not for records and recorded history the descendants of John and Barbara Miller would know nothing of their ancestors.

Thus to close the doors of which I opened almost four years ago when I began my search of the past. I thank John and Barbara for my very existence. So to the Hunter, Woodsman, Indian Fighter, Cooper and Carpenter I wish them still eternal rest, one hundred and fifty six years ago.

WHAT'S THAT NAME AGAIN?

by Your Editorial Staff

In researching names, one must remember that, in years past, not everyone was literate. Even literate person, such as census takers, county clerks or ministers, sometimes "sound spelled" names of literate as well as illiterate persons and first names as well as last.

Often names ending in "a" were pronounced as ending in "ie", "ey" or "y", and appear to be a different name.

While one might assume that Annie would be for Ann Elizabeth, for instance, we must remember that she may have been Leanza, Mary Ann, Annabelle or Nancy.

Nicknames pose a particular nemesis for genealogical research. A great many have already discovered that Polly is a nickname of Mary and a woman may appear in one census (or other record) as Mary and the next as Polly, or vice-versus.

We have omitted a number of the more obvious and still familiar nicknames, such as Kate for Catherine or Bob for Robert, unless they stood for several names. If you find Nan, or Nannie, in one record, her name may be Leanza instead of Nancy or an older woman could become known as Nannie, meaning auntie or grandmother. If you are not aware of some of the old-time name variations, it can make your research more difficult and confusing. Many of the names that are familiar today as given name have evolved from nicknames of the past.

Another aspect is that a person named George Calvin may appear as George in his first census but he came to be known as Cal and appears in later census records as Cal or Calvin. This leads us to think George died young and this is particularly true if ages vary, as they often do in census records.

In this article, we are attempting to pass along some information we have discovered in doing research for both male and female names, as well as names that were used by both sexes. We no longer hear such euphonious names as Comfort, Patience, Obedience or Pleasant or Reason. However, many of the old biblical names, so familiar to genealogical researchers, are again becoming popular.

This is by no means a complete record of nicknames and name variations but we do hope it will assist others who have also found problems in keeping track of "that name". Do you know of others?

Abbreviations of names may pose another problem. When we first see Dan^{l}, we often look for a footnote before we realize it is an abbreviation for Daniel.

Ch^{as}	Dan^{l}	J^{no}
Lem^{l}	Sam^{l}	Th^{os}

When we see Jno the first time, we wonder how it is pronounced until we find it means John.

While it was by no means a hard and fast rule, one old custom was to name the first son for the paternal grandfather and the second son for the maternal grandfather. Often, the same procedure was followed in naming the eldest daughters being named for grandmothers. Sometimes this can be helpful when you run into the "proverbial blank wall".

The staff at the various courthouses no doubt mean well when they type up the old records for preservation but typographical errors can frequently be found, such as distinguishing the old handwritten records, Jas and Jos for James and Joseph for instance. If you lose a name in the typed records, do ask to see the original. Another such error is when a document is signed with an "X". The typewritten record may have the names of the witnesses and yet omit who the "X" is for.

NAMES! NAMES! NAMES! And, after we finally do see the birth record, maybe she was just plain Sukey.
